JONATHAN

Growing up in a single-parent home in a small town like Aulander, North Carolina can be genuinely harsh. Despite the struggles and hardships he and his three brothers faced coming of age in a crime stricken town, Jonathan made a way through education, screenwriting, spoken word, music.

His mother was extremely strict on him and his brothers, but around the time he was in middle /high school, she wasn't able to be around as much. Jonathan was 17-years-old when he found himself in trouble. He was charged as an adult because he soon turned 18. The charges were later expunged.

"Things kind of turned around for me then because I realized that judges, police, and authorities don't care about your life, or what you're going through, they only care about what you did wrong," said Jonathan. "So at that moment I realized I had to show people that there was a good side to the bad, a counterpart."

Jonathan takes his past experiences and ties them with things he's experienced while going to college. He said, "I just want to show people back home that nothing can limit them but themselves."

"The message of his songs are needed. I think a lot of people world wide can relate to the messages."

-SheBloggin

"Jonathan's songs are about why the street life is happening. Why there are drug dealers, robbers, and crime. It's songs about understanding the street life instead of shying away from it like it doesn't exist."

-Carolina On The Rise

"Jonathan is rapper with 10 billion legitimate hustles, and a flow suggestive to nothing describable. He strives to put NC on the map and with everything he does." -HBCU BUZZ

"Jonathan takes his past experiences and ties them with things he's experienced while going to college."

-I AM Val Marie

"These days it's becoming rare to meet an artist full of a great amount of passion for the music...After a brief conversation with artist Jonathan I've discovered that these compassionate artists still exist."

-Jaymarlé
